Mac's Lift Gate salutes Jerry Grinstead, Sr.

Heroes come in all shapes and sizes. From proud firefighters to dedicated soldiers, the United States of America is home to some of the bravest people on the planet.

But often overlooked is the quiet heroism of the ones who dedicate their lives to making those soldiers happen. That's where Jerry Grinstead Sr. makes a difference.

Grinstead is quietly committed to the cause, constantly organizing and sending care packages to troops overseas as if they were his own family. His inbox is littered with appreciation for his hard work ensuring they don't go a day without knowing the folks back home are keeping an eye out for them.

Mac's Lift Gate salutes Jerry Grinstead, Sr. for his dedication to the troops and the nation.

4 ways EMS leaders can better collaborate

EMS1.com

When more than 200 people from eight countries gathered earlier this month in Reno, Nev. to share best practices related to their community paramedic and mobile integrated health care programs, they took away many lessons. One idea in particular permeated the conference — the critical importance of collaboration to be successful, and the earlier collaboration happens in the process, the better.

Staging our response to Ebola and other contagious diseases

JEMS

The Ebola challenge for the American emergency system has arisen very quickly, and provides us with another opportunity to refine the approach to contagious diseases. As emergency providers sit together to draft regional plans, there's a responsibility to take what we learned from Bhopal, SARS, H1N1, anthrax, smallpox and Sarin.

Couple married 65 years dies minutes apart, lying side-by-side

The Huffington Post

Sometimes love is so powerful, not even death can stand in its way. That was the case for Brazilian couple Itelvino and Diva Poss. After 65 years of marriage, the couple died recently lying side-by-side in the same hospital room a mere 40 minutes apart, reports Express UK.
